Mark your Calendars for the 2005 National Salinity Management and Desalination Summit which will be held December 8-9, 2005 at the Sheraton Old Town in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

In building on the success and momentum from the previous three events, the fourth annual Summit will address a wide range of salinity management and desalination topics through a variety of perspectives. The primary focus of this year's summit will be "Policies for Successful Desalination Programs". Successful desalination programs require developing and implementing policies to overcome the various challenges to desalination, and identifying creative and successful methods to bring a project to fruition. Useful policies and approaches will be addressed, as well as funding objectives, bringing local governments on board, technology transfer and implementation, permitting, power costs, co-location of generating and water treatment facilities, environmental issues, and congressional initiatives. Invited Keynote Speakers are Senators Domenici and Bingaman and Governor Richardson. The Summit will be one and one-half days of networking dialogue and discussion between policy makers, managers, technicians and others in an effort to identify and advance breakthroughs in this key area. This is an informative event and a great networking opportunity that you don't want to miss!

A block of rooms has been reserved at the Old Town Sheraton, at a rate of $99/night. Please call 1-800-231-2733 and mention the Nevada Water Resources Association's Summit group rate. The room block is reserved through November 7, 2005. A conference program and registration form will be distributed soon.
